Financial Policy

Many of our patients have dental insurance to cover a portion of all of their dental needs. All dental insurance companies have limitations on what is covered. This will almost always affect your out of pocket expense. Based on our experience, we can estimate your co-payment but we can never completely be sure of its accuracy. Co-payments depend upon the specific contract written between your employer and dental insurance carrier. Estimates can be far from the actual payment due, although it is not common. The most accurate way to determine your out of pocket expense will be to request a predetermination from your insurance company. Predeterminations can take a few weeks to come back to our office.

An estimated co-payment will be due upon completion of any procedure. It is your responsibility to ask what the estimate will be before the doctor starts any dental work.

If more than one appointment is necessary for a particular treatment, then you may divide the co-payments to be paid at each appointment. The final co-payment will be due before the completion of any treatment.

At any point if we have underestimated your co-payment, we will send an invoice to be paid in full upon receipt. If we have overestimated your co-payment, we will send a check to you.

For our patients who do not have dental insurance or have discount plans, we will offer the same courtesy of splitting payments between appointments. The final payment will be due before the completion of any treatment.

I have read and fully understood the above statement. I have been given an opportunity to ask any questions regarding the above statement.
